Oppression occurs when one social group is subordinated while another is privileged, and is maintained by a variety of different mechanisms including social norms, stereotypes and institutional rules. This presentation raises some metaphysical problems for oppression theories and attempts to explain how they might be resolved.

Sponsored by:
Associated Students at Boise State University, Boise State Philosophy Club, and the Boise State University Philosophy Department